is fair, then the public can readily see just how they are being robbed constantly.

As can be seen by the above figures, there were only two out of the whole number of loaves, twenty-six, that weighed a pound and a quarter. Not one of the loaves has approached the standbakers for a five-cent loat, from twenty-two to wenty-four ounces. Eight of the five-cent loaves barely tip the scales at a pound, which means that bakers are making about 159 per cent, on the capital invested, and then they feigh the tumost astonishment when the public even hints that they should sell larger loaves for less money.

In the four-cent loaves, it is noticeable that there is an average falling off of an ounce and a haif. Two of the five loaves did not nearly tip the scales at a pound, and the other three barely brought the average weight up to one pound, which means that again the baker pulls out over 190 per cent on his capital. And these are the men, who when asked why, in view of the great reduction in flour, there has been no reduction in the safe people seen by "The Evening World's of far have admitted that the proposed rejuction could easily be made in plain bread, without any cut in the weight whatever. If this could be done with the greater expense attending the deliveries, &c., among the wholesalers, why cannot the retail bakers, who are under no more expense, do the same "The Evening World's demands are fair, they are just, and they will be

Men who have studied the baking business for years and men who are practical bakers admit the correct-ness of the arguments made by "The Evening World" is not fighting for a mere reduction in the price. It is championing the public desists that the weight of the loaves shall not be decreased. The public insists upon full value for its money, and if the baker will not give it, it will know why.

"Let us have the one-cent reduction, and at least twenty ounces of bread," is the public demand.

in an excited manner. He was one of the searching party and was far in the distance when the children were found. The little bodies were found in a brush heap at daylight. The boy's throat was cut from ear to ear; the gir, was decapitated and disembowelled. An attempt had been made to burn the brush heap, but it was too wet. The theory is that the little girl was assaulted and the double murder committed to hide the crime. The children had left home in the morning to visit an aunt, but when they did not return late in the afternoon the searching party was organized.

Levi Cain and Clarence Brindle have also been placed in jail. There is no direct evidence that they were connected with the crime, but they were found in Hart's house when the latter was taken into custody. The Hart residence, it was found, had been freshly scrubbed, and when it was searched two corn cutters and an axe were found to be missing. There is no doubt the murderer or murderers used such an instrument as an exe in the commission of the awful crime.

The mother of the dead children is seriously ill, and is kept in ignorance of their terrible fate. The father has not been permitted to view the bodies.

As soon as Hart was taken to the Paulding Jali a mob organized to hang the prisoner at once, but were dissuaded on pleas that the chances were largely in favor of the boy's innocence, and that the guilty party was still at large.
